“My fellowship with ZADP was so much more than a teaching fellowship. Whilst I did spend the majority of my time teaching (mostly in-theatre supervision), I learnt more than I taught. I learnt how to teach and supervise others in a different clinical setting to my own and how to manage complex patients with advanced disease processes with limited resources. I learned new ways to be adaptive and collaborative with the theatre team. I gained knowledge from the trainees I went out to teach, not just about anaesthesia but about their resilience and dedication to an anaesthesia program they work so hard to complete. Finally, I've learnt so much about myself. The fellowship challenged me in numerous ways, which is why I feel it was so rewarding. Living in Zambia was a delight, I'd recommend this fellowship to anyone looking for a professional or personal adventure."
